Annotation	The study course will look at the key challenges that a company needs to solve in order to successfully develop adaptability and cope with constant change while working with high performance. Particular attention will be paid to the organizational and cultural aspects, which often prevent the company from developing and lead to bankruptcy. To make such a change, managers must have a strong intuition that allows them to make managerial, organizational, and business decisions. The "holistic" thinking that good leaders need to have and how to take advantage of it when developing and implementing strategies will also be explored.
Goals and objectives of the course in terms of competences and skills	The aim of the study course is to teach how to get people to recognize the ever-changing reality and take on the challenges associated with it. The tasks of the study course: 1. To develop practical knowledge in managing organizational change 2. To improve change management skills. The leader must be an example of the behaviour he would like to expect from others. This also applies to areas such as personal growth, self-awareness, self-motivation and problem-solving skills. 3. To develop skills to analyse and put into practice human communication skills so that people take individual and collective responsibility to create and improve the conditions in which they find themselves. 4. To develop communication, motivation and decision-making skills will be developed to build a strong management team and manage the dynamics of the organization.
Structure and tasks of independent studies	Students independently analyze the literature of the study course. Analyze cases related to the transformation of companies or organizations, develop implementation plan for the necessary changes, analyze business failures. Prepare for assignments, presentations, tests and exams.
